Living London is a newly commissioned multiple-screen film installation by artist and film-maker Gerry Fox. It is the result of the first annual artistic residency at 176, during which Fox collaborated with the curatorial team at the gallery and members of the local community. Inspired by London, the exhibition takes visitors on a journey through the gallery as they move through a series of audio-visual environments, immersing them different scenes of the city, and experienced from the point of view of the film-maker himself. The installation makes tangible the power of film to evoke the spatial and temporal sensations experienced in dreams
